How shall I thank you for this pledge, This sweet assurance, which destroys The doubt that you my love repaid. And changes all my fears to joya! Ever believe you true? I will I hold you to this written gage! This chall console me, now you're gone; Still next my heart I'll bear the page;

By tlay and night, where er I go, -It shall my prized companion be; And if a thought would gainst you rise, This from all blame shall set you free. Ab, need I say, believe me true?

You know how tender, yot how atrong, This heart's emotions are, how half Of all its throbs to you belong; How fain 'twould hurst its prison-walls To nestling heat against your own : How joyons 'twos when you were near, How sadly yearning now, alone. Ay, till the weary life is done, ... Though we again may never meet,

Let's not forget the by gone days That a like a dream passed, swift and sweet Still let thy knowledge of my love Thy faith in humant ind renew : Let that great love still for me plead, And, to the last, believe me true! -Chambers's Journal -
